It was first decided to lynch Frank just after his sentence was commuted and he was delivered to the prison. From the start it was the plan to lynch him here where Mary Phagan was born. Many times the plans leaked, once with the result that militia were called out to protect the jail. After the convict treen attempted to murder him the plan was left in abeyance until Sunday, when word came from the prison that Frank was about to be discharged from the hospital as recovered from his wound. The self-appointed executioners at least did not wish to hang a sick man.
